

Discovery Theater

presents

How Old is a Hero?

A Children's Civil Rights Play

based on the original play by Raquis Da' Juan Petree

adapted by Michael J. Bobbitt and Roberta Gasbarre

A REPRODUCIBLE LEARNING GUIDE FOR TEACHERS

This guide is designed to help you and your students prepare for, enjoy, and discuss How Old is a Hero? It contains background information, discussion questions & activities.

Appropriate for ages 6–12 / grades 1–6.

The Smithsonian Associates

Discovery Theater programs are made possible, in part, by gifts from

Guenther and Siewchen Yong Sommer

*Discovery Theater Artistic Director:
Roberta Gasbarre*

Learning Guide Text & Layout: Anne Stewart O'Donnell

(202) 633-8700 • DTinfo@DiscoveryTheater.org • DiscoveryTheater.org

See our website for tickets, location, directions, resources for teachers, and much more!

To Be an Activist

The world isn't perfect—yet! On the news we see war and cruelty, unfairness and pollution. And sometimes we see these things right in our own neighborhoods. But that doesn't mean we have to accept them.

Every day, people all over the world work to change things for the better. People who don't just sit there—who try to change things they think are bad—are called activists. Activists come in all shapes and sizes. Your great-grandmother can be one. So can you! You don't need to be famous, or rich, or even old enough to vote. All that's important is that you do something, big or small, to stand up for what you believe.

What are some ways to be an activist? You can work with the government by voting, by going to court, or by contacting the people elected to represent you. You can get the word out about a problem by talking to reporters for newspapers and TV stations. You can demonstrate by marching with a sign, or simply by sitting down and refusing to move!

Being an activist doesn't mean being violent. You don't need big muscles—just a strong spirit and a strong purpose. The most important activists ever, including Ghandi in India and Martin Luther King in America, entirely rejected violence. They and their followers got the world's attention by being peaceful, strong, and dignified. They achieved great changes because they never gave up, even in the face of threats.

The play How Old is a Hero? tells the stories of three young activists—Ruby, Ernest, and Claudette—who stood up for what they believed in. They brought their hope and energy to one great cause—ending segregation in the American South.

What was Segregation?

Fifty years ago in the South, laws existed to keep black people and white people apart. Black people had to use separate restrooms from whites, and drink from different water fountains. They could buy things from the big stores in town, but they weren't allowed to sit down and eat at the stores' lunch counters. They could purchase clothes from the "white" stores, but they weren't allowed to try them on first, because they might get them "dirty" or "greasy."

This kind of separation was known as segregation. City buses were segregated, because white people got to sit up front, but black people were forced to ride in the back. (If you were black, you might have to ride standing up, even if the "white" seats were empty.) Most unfairly of all, schools were segregated. White students went to all-white schools, which usually provided better books, equipment, and opportunity than the schools set aside for African-American children.

Segregation wasn't fair, but many people accepted it. They didn't think they could change the way things had been for so long. However, others felt the unjust laws had to go. People of all colors and ages became activists as they began to protest against laws that treated blacks as second-class citizens.

Kids on the March

Kids played a big role in these civil rights protests. They carried signs at rallies and sang freedom songs. When fifteen-year-old Claudette Colvin helped touch off the Montgomery, Alabama bus boycott, thousands of other kids did their part by walking to school every day, just as their parents were walking to work. In 1963, a series of protest marches was even called the Children’s Crusade, because so many young activists were arrested for taking part.

Adults went to court to win the right for black students and white students to go to school together. But grown-ups can’t actually attend school. Ultimately, the only people who can integrate a school are schoolchildren themselves.

To stop school segregation, kids had to take the lead.

Ernest Green and the Little Rock Nine

Ernest Green was a senior in 1957 when he and eight other black students—known as “The Little Rock Nine”—integrated Central High School in Little Rock, Arkansas. There was so much trouble from segregationists that President Eisenhower sent in army troops to escort The Nine to school and patrol the hallways. In spite of it all, Ernest became the first black student to graduate from the school.

Looking back, Ernest said, “One thing I think is very important is this: while the nine of us may have been preselected, there really are nine, ten, thirty, forty, fifty kids in every community that could have done that.... We were all ordinary kids. You really do have the ability to do a lot more than you’ve been told.... If given the opportunity, you’ll be surprised at how much you can do, how much you can achieve.”

When he left Central High School, says Ernest Green, “I remember reading in the paper that my graduating was going to be a real milestone. I thought to myself, This is great, but I want to do something else in life besides graduating from Little Rock High School. What do I do from here?”

What did Ernest do? He eventually served as Assistant Secretary of Labor under President Jimmy Carter! Later he became an investment banker, living here in Washington, DC.

Claudette Colvin and the Montgomery Bus Boycott

Claudette Colvin was fifteen when she refused to move to the back of a segregated bus in Montgomery, Alabama.

“On March 2, 1955,” she says, “I got on the bus in front of Dexter Avenue Church.... I wasn’t thinking about anything in particular. I think I had just finished eating a candy bar....

A white lady was sitting across the aisle from me, and it was against the law for you to sit in the same aisle with a white person.

‘The bus driver looked back through the rearview mirror....He said, “Hey, get up!”...The white people were complaining.

‘I said, “No. I do not have to get up. I paid my fare, so I do not have to get up. It’s my constitutional right to sit here just as much as that lady. It’s my constitutional right!’”

Policemen pulled Claudette off the bus, handcuffed her, and arrested her. She was convicted of violating the law and had to pay a fine. A few months later, when Rosa Parks also refused to give up her bus seat to a white passenger, the black citizens of Montgomery, Alabama had had enough. For the next thirteen months, until the law was changed, they and their supporters refused to ride Montgomery City buses. It was a boycott!

The word boycott comes from the name of Charles Boycott, a cruel land agent in Ireland who refused to lower high rents. To persuade him to change, people got together and refused to have any business dealings with him.

A young African-American minister named Martin Luther King was put in charge of the bus boycott. Almost all the black people in Montgomery—over 17,000 men, women, and children—organized to find other ways to get to work and school. They walked, shared taxicabs, and got rides in private cars. (A few even rode mules!)

The bus company lost thousands of dollars in fares. Even more disturbing to segregationists, however, was the fact that so many people could work together, day after day, to stand up for their rights. As the rest of the U.S. began to take notice, the city fought back. City leaders created laws that made it almost impossible for blacks to use taxis and carpools. Some people spread false reports that the boycott was over. Others tried harassment or even violent attacks against black people.

Young and old, black citizens stuck together and kept up the boycott. Without carpools, however, African-American leaders knew that many people would be forced to start riding buses again. So they turned to the United States legal system: they filed a federal lawsuit against Montgomery's bus segregation laws, saying that these laws violated the 14th amendment of the United States Constitution. Eventually, the Supreme Court agreed. Segregation of buses was illegal.

The Montgomery Bus Boycott has been called the start of the organized civil rights movement. It brought Martin Luther King to national attention. And fifteen-year-old Claudette helped make it happen.

Ratified in 1868, the Fourteenth Amendment forbids any state to deny to any person "life, liberty or property, without due process of law" or to "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of its laws." This promise continues to provide a basis for civil rights claims in the United States.

Claudette Colvin grew up and moved to New York, where she worked in a nursing home. She raised two sons.

“The bus protest carried on by the colored people of Montgomery, Alabama, without violence, has been one of the most remarkable achievements of people fighting for their own rights but doing so without bloodshed and with the most remarkable restraint and discipline, that we have ever witnessed in this country.” —Eleanor Roosevelt

Ruby Bridges and School Desegregation

Ruby Bridges was only six in 1960 when she stepped into first grade—and into history. The year before, black kindergarteners in New Orleans had been given a special, extremely difficult test by the school board. Ruby was one of only a few who passed. Black leaders in New Orleans thought she would be an excellent student to help desegregate an all-white school, so she was assigned to the William Frantz Public School.

Three other first-grade girls were selected at the same time as Ruby. They were assigned to integrate McDonogh, another school a few miles from William Frantz.

Every day, federal agents escorted Ruby into the school through shouting, angry crowds who wanted to keep the school for white students only. Because these segregationists kept their own children home as a protest, Ruby had the school almost to herself for most of the year. She never saw the few white students who came, because they were kept away from her classroom.

The William Frantz School had 576 enrolled students when Ruby began classes there. Three days later, attendance was only 4—including Ruby herself.

Ruby was the only student in her class, but she wasn't alone. She had Mrs. Barbara Henry, a young, dedicated white teacher. Mrs. Henry had just moved to New Orleans from Boston, so she was a newcomer to the school as well. When the other teachers refused to teach Ruby, Mrs. Henry volunteered.

It was a hard year, but it was worth it. By the next September, thanks to Ruby, integration was accepted at William Frantz. She and other black children could go to school there without federal marshals for protection.

A New Kind of Segregation

Ruby stayed in New Orleans, became a travel agent, got married and raised four sons. For a while her first-grade experiences faded into the background, but in the 1990s several things happened that revived the past.

- With her nieces attending William Frantz, Ruby began to volunteer at the school she had helped to integrate decades before.
- A picture book was published about her part in the civil rights movement.
- After more than thirty years, she was reunited with Mrs. Henry, the teacher she had never forgotten and who had never forgotten her.

Ruby felt these events were coming together for a purpose. The William Frantz School, she says, "is in a poor neighborhood in the inner city, and most of the students there are African-American. As is true of most inner-city schools, there's never enough funding to keep William Frantz up to current standards or even to offer students the same opportunities they would receive in some of the suburban schools....The kids are being segregated all over again."

So, for the second time, Ruby became an activist. To help fight racism and "turn inner-city public schools into great schools," she created the Ruby Bridges Foundation. She and Mrs. Henry often visit schools together to tell students what they learned from the integration experience.

Mrs. Henry says, "I grew to love Ruby and to be awed by her. It was an ugly world outside, but I tried to make our world together as normal as possible. Neither of us ever missed a day. It was important to keep going."

How Old Do You Have To Be To Make a Difference?

Claudette Colvin and Ernest Green were teenagers. Ruby Bridges was only six. Yet these three are still remembered today, because they stood up for what they believed in. They refused to quit until “they got what they came for”—an end to the laws that said they didn’t deserve the best education possible, or to sit where they wanted on a bus.

It’s never too early—or too late!—to be an activist, to stand up for your beliefs with strength and dignity.

So, how old do you have to be to make a difference? The answer is, how old are you?

“Our Ruby taught us all a lot. She became someone who helped change our country. She was part of history, just like generals and presidents are part of history. They’re leaders, and so was Ruby. She led us away from hate, and she led us nearer to knowing each other, the white folks and the black folks.”

—Lucille Bridges, Ruby’s Mother

FOR DISCUSSION AFTER THE SHOW

What is Courage?

- Did Ruby’s mother want Ruby to go to the new elementary school? Why or why not? Was Mrs. Bridges brave?
- Ernest Green didn’t use his fists to fight back, even when angry people yelled and spit at him. What did he do instead? Did that take courage?
- Do you think there are different kinds of courage? What are some of them?

What is Activism?

- What is activism? Who were some of the activists you remember from the play? Can regular people be activists? How?
- Ruby spoke of Mrs. Henry as her first white friend. How can your teacher be your friend? How can you make friends with people who are different from yourself? Why is it good to have friends who are different?

Activities...for Young Activists!

Making Headlines

Every day, people like Claudette and Ernest, Ruby and Mrs. Henry stand up for what they believe in. In big ways and small ways, they help make the world better.

Do you know somebody who has stood up for something? Maybe someone you know has cleaned up your neighborhood, or stopped a bully, or worked in a soup kitchen to help feed the homeless. (Hint: It doesn't have to be someone famous!)

Put that person in the news! Draw a picture to go on the "front page." Write a caption, a headline and a news story about the person and their accomplishment.

In the Picture

The artist Norman Rockwell painted a picture of Ruby on her way to school, called The Problem We All Live With. This picture was published in a magazine and became one of the most famous images of its time.

In the library or on the internet, find a copy of this picture. Take a good look at it. Rockwell didn't paint the mob of angry people who wanted to keep Ruby out of school, but he let us know they were there. How? (Clues: graffiti; tomato splattered on wall; federal marshals)

How does Ruby look in the picture? Does she look scared? Brave? Hopeful? How does the picture make you feel about what went on?

Active-ate Your School!

Why did Ruby and Ernest struggle for school integration so long ago? Because they wanted African-Americans to have access to a better education than the "black" schools could offer them. And why did black people want and need a better education?

Because a good education gives you power.

It's true. Throughout history, tyrannical governments have tried to keep people ignorant. Why? If you can read and write, you're better able to find out what's going on around you. You can find out about ideas for change, and communicate your own ideas to other people far away. In the past, women, slaves, and other oppressed groups often received little education. This lack of knowledge and abilities helped shut them out of the full rights and privileges every human being should be given.

Today, laws guarantee people more rights. But a good education is still essential. It gives you the basic tools for living in our society, and helps you discover and develop your unique talents. It helps you find out where you want to go and how to get there.

Ruby Bridges is still an activist for schools. At William Frantz, she says, "we hired teachers for multicultural arts programs. We started a ballet class, an African dance class, and a class on manners and etiquette. My hope is to bring programs like these to other inner-city schools. I believe we must turn inner-city schools into great schools....I believe strongly in literacy and the power of education.”

Is your school a great school? What would make your school better? More computers? Better science or sports equipment? More field trips to Discovery Theater? Write down all the improvements you can think of.

Now, get active—right this minute! Pick one improvement and start making it happen. Brainstorm with your friends and your teacher. Exactly what is needed? How can you get it? Who might help you? (Some possibilities: librarian, principal, PTA, school board, elected representatives, arts organizations, businesses.) Hint: You might put the “squeaky wheel” technique to work for you (see below).

Be a Squeaky Wheel

Abraham Lincoln described the United States government as “government of the people, by the people, and for the people.” What does “people” mean? It means you.

Government officials—like mayors, senators, representatives, and even the President—are there for you. They have a responsibility to be your voice. But they aren’t psychic! How do they know what you think?

They can’t know—unless you tell them.

What do you care about? Endangered animals? Pollution? People’s rights? Health care? Peace?

Be a squeaky wheel! Look up the names and addresses of your elected officials - president, vice-president, U.S. or state senators and representatives, and mayor. Write to them about something important to you.

If you want, illustrate your letter. The sample shown will help.

Your address
February 14, 2007

President George W. Bush
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Bush,

I am writing because _____ is important to me. (Tell why in two or three sentences.)

Sincerely,

Your Name

Brown v Board of Education

What was it? Why was it important?

May 17, 2004 marked the 50th anniversary of the landmark Supreme Court decision in the legal case known as BROWN V. BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Do some research! Who was "Brown"? What was the case about? How did it change the lives of Ruby Bridges and of every other kid in America?

Why is your school different today because of this ruling?

Timeline

1954

- Ruby Bridges is born
- Supreme Court outlaws school desegregation in the case called Brown versus Board of Education of Topeka, Kansas

1955

- March: Black teenager Claudette Colvin is arrested for refusing to give up her seat on a bus to a white person.
- December: Rosa Parks is arrested for refusing to give up her seat on a Montgomery, Alabama city bus to a white woman. The Montgomery Bus Boycott begins.

1956

- March: Almost 100 Southern U.S. senators and congressmen vow to fight desegregation of schools.
- November: U.S. Supreme Court declares Montgomery, Alabama bus segregation laws unconstitutional.
- December: The Montgomery bus boycott ends. City buses are integrated.

1957

- September: Governor Faubus of Arkansas orders National Guard troops to keep nine black students from integrating Little Rock's Central High School. President Eisenhower sends the army's 101st Airborne Division to protect the Little Rock Nine.

1958

- May: Ernest Green becomes the first black student to graduate from Central High.
- August/ September: Governor Faubus closes all Little Rock public schools to prevent further integration.

1960

- November: Ruby Bridges starts first grade at William Frantz Public School in New Orleans. Three other first-graders integrate a neighboring school.

1963

- April/May: Huge anti-segregation demonstrations are held in Birmingham. So many are arrested, especially children, that the campaign is called the "Children's Crusade."

1964

- Fall: First students integrate schools in Montgomery, Alabama.

Related Resources

The music and audio clips used in this production of How Old is a Hero? are taken from the CDs Every Tone a Testimony and Voices of the Civil Rights Movement.

The quotations used in this guide are taken from the book Through My Eyes by Ruby Bridges, from the web site www.rubybridges.org, and from interviews in Freedom's Children by Ellen Levine.

See the list below for details.

- The Story of Ruby Bridges, by Robert Coles. Ruby's achievement in picture-book format for ages 4 to 8. The author is the child psychologist who worked with Ruby during her integration experience.
- Ruby Bridges, A Real American Hero. A full-length feature film from Disney, available on video. Ages 8 & up.
- Through My Eyes, by Ruby Bridges. Grown-up Ruby tells her own story, with news photos and article excerpts from the time. Excellent first-person history for children.
- www.rubybridges.org—Ruby's own web site. Find out more about her story and the foundation she has formed to fight racism. See how you can help with the book she's writing!
- Eyes on the Prize: America's Civil Rights Years, 1954-1965. This highly acclaimed PBS television series, available on video, may be the definitive history of the movement. Older readers will also enjoy the companion book by Juan Williams.
- Freedom's Children, edited by Ellen Levine. Ernest, Claudette, and dozens of other young activists remember their parts in the civil rights struggles of the 50s and 60s, with Levine adding background and context. Ages 9 & up.
- Cracking the Wall: The Struggles of the Little Rock Nine, by Eileen Lucas. A well-written Easy Reader, with plenty of personal detail.
- www.centralhigh57.org—Central High School's official web site. Great coverage of the Little Rock Nine, then and now.
- Every Tone a Testimony (Smithsonian Folkways Recordings)—this double CD draws upon Smithsonian archives to create a history of African American life and culture in sound, featuring music, oratory, poetry, and prose by historically renowned African American musicians, writers, and activists.
- Voices of the Civil Rights Movement: Black American Freedom Songs 1960-1966 (Smithsonian Folkways Recordings)—this 2-CD set (accompanied by a booklet written by Bernice Johnson Reagon and featuring rare historic photographs) documents the powerful story of African American musical culture and its role in the Civil Rights Movement.

Vocabulary

Constitution—a constitution is a written statement of the rules and laws of a government or organization. The Constitution of the United States is the supreme law of the United States of America, listing the powers and duties of the government and the rights of its citizens.

Right (rights)—something a person is automatically entitled to Constitutional Rights—rights and personal freedoms guaranteed to people by the U.S. Constitution

Civil Rights—rights and personal freedoms guaranteed to people specifically by the 13th and 14th amendments to the Constitution of the United States. (The 13th Amendment made slavery illegal; the 14th guarantees all citizens equal rights and protection under the law.)

Segregation—keeping two or more groups separated

Integration—mixing two or more groups

Desegregation—the process of going from segregation to integration

Unconstitutional—not allowed, based on the Constitution of the United States

Boycott—a form of protest where people refuse to buy some product or use some service

Activist—someone of any age who takes direct action to support a belief

Race—a group of people sharing certain physical traits (such as skin color, shape of eyes, hair color, etc.) that can be passed on to offspring and that seem to set that group apart from other groups

Racism—the belief that one race is better or worse than another race

Versus—against (used in court cases); abbreviated v. or vs.

About Discovery Theater

Discovery Theater, the Smithsonian Institution's theater for children, has been dedicated to offering the best in live performing arts for young people since 1979. Each year, more than 50,000 Washington-area children and their adults visit DT (now located in the Smithsonian's S. Dillon Ripley Center on the National Mall in Washington, DC) to explore American history and cultures, folk tales from around the world, and exciting, accessible science and math programs in the company of puppeteers, storytellers, dancers, actors, musicians and mimes. DT performances unite ideologies, enact themes that reflect the diversity of its audiences, open avenues of self-reflection, and offer an enjoyable means for parents and teachers to demonstrate life's lessons.

DT frequently collaborates with distinguished partners such as The Library of Congress, The United States Holocaust Memorial Museum, The Lemelson Center for Study of Invention and Innovation, and America's Jazz Heritage, A Partnership of the Lila Wallace-Reader's Digest Fund and the Smithsonian Institution. Some of our favorite programs are also going on tour, and our partnership with Round House Theater in Silver Spring, MD means that DT's special brand of educational entertainment for kids is more widely available than ever before. For details, call 202-633-8700 or see www.DiscoveryTheater.org.

